

James Green: helped by Right hand men

by Melinda Wittstock

Newly elected Student Society President James Green's may owe his victory to the efforts of representatives from P.C. McGill, the McGill Magazine, and Americans' Abroad.

Steve Smith of Americans' Abroad and the McGill Magazine contributor and Mark Proudman, editor of the McGill Magazine were "the guys who did all the legwork for my campaign," says Green. Green told the Daily, however, his "official campaign manager" was MSS Ombudsman David Rose.

However, Smith says he and Proudman were Green's official campaign managers.

"(David) Rose is a friend of Green's. Mr. Rose volunteered to do a number of things but he was not a campaign coordinator like Mr. Proudman and I," said Smith.

Green says he approached groups representing neo-conservatism because members had experience with previous election campaigns.

"I approached them because they had taken part in federal election campaigns — I wanted to win the election and they had the experience," said Green in an interview Friday.

Asked whether he asked for their support because he agreed with their politics, Green said: "You've got to be kidding. I totally disagree with what the McGill Magazine stands for."

Green said he only made one campaign promise to the campus neo-conservatives — an "umbrella organization for political parties — from fascists to communists — so they could all have funding and get an office."

"That's the only thing I promised," says Green.

Green says "they didn't help me with policy formation or anything like that; they just helped me to get around to all the big classes and made sure I was never walking around campus by myself — they made sure I always had people around me."

According to campaign coordinator Steve Smith, who saw Green as the "moderate alternative," said Green, "unlike the Alliance, was not tied to any special interests. He is my friend."

Arnold Cohen, editorial board member of the Magazine and anglophone co-ordinator of P.C. Youth Québec says he is "very pleased" with the election results.

Cohen, who says he was marginally involved in the campaign, says he supported Green because he was the "moderate" candidate.

Cohen says Green did not approach the McGill Magazine and P.C. McGill because he was "receptive to our views."

Rather, says Cohen, "we were all afraid of the Alliance, not because they were homosexuals, but they represented radicalism."

But according to Alliance candidate for V.P. External Daron Westman, "We (the Alliance) were accused of

Degrees faked

OTTAWA (CUP) — U.S. residents have been buying fake McGill and University of Toronto diplomas through a U.S. "diploma mill," a federal investigation has disclosed.

The FBI, in operation DIPSCAM discovered that 20 US residents have fraudulent U of T diplomas and a "undisclosed number" have fake diplomas from McGill.

Dennis Gunter, an Oregon entrepreneur operating "Alumni Arts", the diploma factory, was sentenced Feb. 14 on two counts of mail and wire fraud in Federal district court.

Gunter only offered fake degrees from the two Canadian universities, but sold degrees for up to 300 colleges and universities in the U.S. Evidence at recent U.S. Congressional hearings suggests more than 10,000 doctors throughout North America have fake medical degrees.

Gunter sold fake degrees to addresses in Calgary, Ottawa, Kitchener, Montréal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg. Most

In its prime the apparently defunct McGill Magazine was a good ideological investment for two Right-wing American organizations.

Not only was the McGill Magazine given a start-up grant from the New York based Institute for Educational Affairs (IEA), as revealed by the Daily in November, but a new Daily investigation shows another organisation directed mainly by Right-wing American businessmen provided money, professional lay-out and editorial advice to the Magazine and helped create the recent instant network of ultra-conservative "student" publications on Canadian campuses.

Jeffrey Dodi, Programs Director of the USIC, contacted at USIC head offices in Brentwood, Tennessee, confirmed they provided funding and professional assistance to seven identical publications distributed across Ontario.

McGill Magazine published more than ten issues while most new Canadian ultra-conservative Magazines published

Magazine breeder spawns Rightist review

McGill Continuing Education student and publisher of The McGill Magazine, Francis Willers, is currently soliciting endorsements for a new conservative student magazine from federal cabinet ministers, business leaders and university heads, according to documents obtained by Canadian University Press (CUP).

The bilingual magazine, called Canadian National Review is to be published and edited by Willers and will be distributed nationally within two weeks.

by Julien Feldman (CUP)

Willers was also responsible for a chain of cloned right-wing newspapers appearing under different names on Québec and Ontario university campuses last fall. The newspapers were bankrolled by the non-profit, New York-based Institute for Educational Affairs (IEA), a neo-conservative propaganda mill through its Young Journalist Program.

In a letter mailed to all Tory cabinet ministers obtained by CUP, Willers requests any and all "flattering remarks you care to give us."

In the letter, Willers writes

...right hand men

politicizing the campaign by right-wing ideologues who themselves politicized the campaign.

"They masqueraded as ordinary people," says Westman. "They tried to pretend they were apolitical but they were more politicized than we were."

Newly-elected Undergraduate Board of Governors representative and Alliance member Amy Kaler agreed with Westman:

"They (the McGill Magazine and P.C. McGill) were attempting to make what was essentially a 'left-right' confrontation look like a political-apolitical confrontation."

"my media plan is contingent upon flattering letters of endorsement." Willers also encourages ministers to follow the example of "your colleagues," claiming Defence Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Erik Nielsen, and Supply and Services Minister Harvie André have already submitted such endorsements for use on the letters page of the Review's charter issue.

However, copies of the Ministers' letters only offer Willers "the best of luck in your latest endeavour," according to a source who refused to be named for publication.

Perry Miele, an aide to Harvey André said he recalled letters from Willers to the Minister, but said he was "not aware of any endorsement." Dianna O'Doherty, spokesperson for Erik Nielsen also denied any knowledge of the Willers letters or endorsements.

Other Ministerial aides acknowledged receipt of the Willers letter and a pre-production copy of the Review, but also indicated no endorsement would be issued.

Willers himself seems to have become an extremely unpopular figure among conservative journalists in Canada and the U.S., because of his unethical practices.

Jonathon Cohen, IEA Student Co-ordinator said the national magazine is a "totally renegade affair," and will receive no IEA funds."

Of Willers' now defunct newspapers, Cohen said "they had the life of most student projects: very short — and very radical."

"The unusual drive, determination and obsession of Mr. Willers continues to surprise me; however, he has fallen short in the past, and I think he will continue to do so."

The pre-production mock-up of Canadian National Review, also obtained by CUP, contains several articles reprinted — without credit — from The Princeton Tory (an IEA paper), Princeton's "only journal of moderate and conservative

McGill to moot in N.Y.

by Brendan Weston

McGill's team of four Law students has won the Canadian Division of the 'Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition' in Alberta, and will go on to the World Final held in New York this April.

It was the first time McGill has won the Canadian division of the Phillip C. Jessup International Law Moot Competition, but the bilingual team is confident about making it to the finals in New York.

McGill must win in the international division before playing the winner of the American division in the finals.

Said team member Daniel Gogek, "We've been told the calibre of the Canadian division is higher than the international." However, Gogek continued "its 50-50 once we get to the Americans."

The team argues both sides of an international dispute between the fictional nations ICBAM and MIRVA, both signatories of a nuclear arms non-proliferation treaty. When ICBAM begins developing nuclear weapons, while all other nations in the region declare a nuclear-free zone, MIRVA bombs ICBAM's nuclear facilities.

Asked if the team had a personal preference in the dispute, team member Julie Latour said: "I think we're all more for MIRVA." But, Gogek quickly interjected, "it all depends."

Gogek and Latour also differed on the relevance of an international court.

"I think international law is taking on a more legitimate role" said Gogek, but Latour objected: "Come on, it was disastrous what the Americans did in Nicaragua."

The McGill team, which won five awards in the Canadian division is currently attempting to raise approximately $8000 in expenses for their week in New York.

Last year, Nova Scotia's Dalhousie University beat out 21 other nations and 12 U.S. universities in the competition to take the title.

sional cartoons, courses in layout techniques, advice and contacts with professional conservative journalists, editorial advice and methods for approaching advertisers.

These services are provided for free in order to "give them the opportunity to compete against other university publications," said Dodt.

The USIC is dedicated to building up a core of right-wing journalists in order to combat what it sees as "the entrenched liberal bias" in the mainstream media, and to bring conservative ideas to North American campuses.

Although both organisations have similar goals, "the USIC is much more right-wing and has fewer academics than the IEA," said Fred Clarkson of Interchange, a Washington-based organisation which monitors right-wing activity.

In an editorial titled "The Canadian Buy-out" the U.S. weekly newsmagazine the Nation referred to the Daily's IEA story, and compared Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's concessions to U.S. business interests to the IEA's student campaign in Canada. "The legislation comes as Canada is agog with the realization that at least ten publications affiliated with its universities, among them McGill Magazine and Queen's University's Libertas, have been receiving funds and editorial guidance from the Institute for Educational Affairs. The Nation states the magazines "predictably, called for more U.S. investment in Canada. The magazines could offer themselves as shining examples of what these dollars can buy."

Unlike the IEA, the Council does not wait for grant applications from conservative students, said Dodt, but goes out and recruits staff for its newspapers.

"We have found this to be a good way of promoting the conservative cause on campuses," he said.

Interchange's Clarkson describes the IEA and Council programmes as "corporate welfare for rich students." He believes the network of subsidies, grants and professional advice for the student newspapers from the two Institutes, backed by millions of dollars, contradicts their avowed free enterprise philosophy.

Another USIC publication, The Princeton Tory, will have trouble doing without USIC funds next year. The USIC gave them 85 per cent of their $15,000 operating budget for this year.

"They're going to have to keep supporting us for a while," Yoram Hazony, editor of the Tory, told the Daily.

Dodt stressed how hard it is for conservative papers to continue publishing after getting the initial help from organisations like the IEA.

"Campuses can be very hostile to new ideas and some newspapers have a very hard time getting established," he said. "Our message to them is you're not in it alone."

Dodt stressed the USIC did not provide a constant source of funding. "If they're doing well, we leave them alone," he said. However, Dodt added they stop funding newspapers and journals that don't show any promise.

Memorandum 40: still investigating the Holocaust

by Leela MadhavaRau

The Roosevelt administration forfeited the lives of several hundred thousand Jews locked in extermination camps in Nazi Germany, argues historian David Wyman.

Wyman is one of several speakers in Memorandum 40 — a Holocaust Dossier 4 Decades Later. The series of speakers and films, presented by Hillel, Program Board and Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, reflects the on-going investigation of the Holocaust and its consequences.

Wyman, who will speak on March 20, asks the question "Where was Christian concern?" when the Roosevelt administration refused to deploy aerial attacks on Auschwitz and other death camps on the grounds that all military munitions were in use against "priority military targets".

The film "Morgen In Alabama", which will play on March 21, co-sponsored by Hillel and the Daily depicts the re-emergence of neo-fascism among disenfranchised, middle class, marginal youth in Germany today. The film explores issues on both sides of the political spectrum and concludes that both extreme "right" and "left" are essentially similar and are equally capable of abusing power. Although there have been changes since Nazi Germany, this film argues neo-fascism is still a viable force.

John Singal, a McGill psychiatry Professor, will speak on March 19 on the psychological implications of the Holocaust on second and third generations. On the 14th a documentary film will be shown on the same subject.

Tory managing editor Daniel Polisar, contacted by CUP in Princeton, New Jersey, expressed surprise when told his journal had not been credited, although he was aware the articles were to be re-printed.

"I only naturally assumed the Tory would be credited as the original source," he said.

When contacted by CUP at a LaSalle phone number identified by a recorded message as the headquarters of Canadian National Review, Willers said he would respond to written questions only.

"All I can say is that we'll be out within two weeks," he said.

of these degrees were for American institutes, primarily in California.

One Toronto pharmacist bought a medical degree from Medical Education Placement Inc for $10,000. He testified to a Congressional Selection Committee that if it were not for his capture, "I would have made a good doctor."

McGill registrar Jean-Paul Schuller did not seem too alarmed about the fake McGill degrees. "McGill's degrees are well enough recognised across North America that it would take a good forgery to trick somebody."

Schuller said he feels the crime is not so much those with the fake diplomas but those with the real ones who be beaten out of a job by someone with a fake record which shows better grades.

He is surprised, however, that Gunter's operation was selling diplomas, noting that transcripts were the documents schools go by in North America.

"In the Third World, though, the diploma is much more the thing that opens doors, Schuller said.

Asked whether he was flattered that McGill diplomas were being faked Schuller said he would "much rather not get involved, even though it is a sort of back handed compliment."

RCMP Sergeant Carl Stowski said he did not know if the RCMP was trying to track down Canadians with fake diplomas from U.S. universities, and that if the RCMP was just co-operating with an FBI effort they would not comment on it.

The ASUS is Watching You

To the Daily:

A vicious rumour was recently caught floating around R.V.C. stating that the A.S.U.S. was supposedly making a profit on their upcoming Graduate Ball. As a totally unmalicious but often friendly student, I was lucky enough to have the ASUS trace this rumour back to me through that 'weird and wonderful' web of lies that rumours often tend to generate.

I cannot tell a lie. I have had conversations with future fellow graduates who have questioned the validity of the $25 cover charge, just in the same way we have discussed other university issues. I assure you I am absolutely innocent of the creation of any such rumour, however, regardless of whether the rumour has any validity to it or not, (I was personally ensured that this is not the case and that the ASUS is actually subsidizing this event) are we not allowed to question and voice our opinions on university matters without having our thoughts monitored and controlled?

I cannot believe that the ASUS which is supposedly representative of the students can turn around and 'step' on the very body they support, and an innocent one at that! I would advise you to be more careful in the future.

Rightist pair's red-baiting backfires

To the Daily:

Two letters have appeared in the Daily condemning the Alliance slate for "politicizing" Student Society elections. This politicization takes the form of discussing issues more complex than the price of beer and pizza, and both Peter Theolikos and Colleen M. Glavin inform us it is a Bad Thing. Naturally, we are to understand that by red-baiting the Alliance neither Mr. Theolikos nor Ms. Glavin seek to politicize anything.

Just how "extremist" is the Alliance platform? Neither letter lists specific issues or explains how the Alliance position on these issues put it beyond the pale. Let's pick a plank from the Alliance platform, and see just how unrepresentative it is of student concerns.

The Alliance wants to divest McGill funds from institutions that do business with South Africa. This proposal, more than anything, is likely to earn right wing condemnation as a "moral crusade". However, the majority of non-Alliance candidates also list it as a goal. In fact, divestment has consistently won majority support in Student Society referenda. Ms. Glavin fears the Alliance "may confuse their social concerns with priorities for student government." At least one of these social concerns has been official priority of Student Society for three years. Ms. Glavin should ask herself why no one at McGill seems interested in running on a platform of constructive engagement.

The stridency of that attacks on the Alliance and their "moral crusade" have a lot to do with the failure of the writers' own local jihad to get off the ground.

Zundel Trial unnecessary

To the Daily:

Should I congratulate you for digging up Ernest Zundel's past connections with a Canadian Nazi, Adrien Arcand (Daily Feb. 28th)?

There was no need to take the Holocaust issue to the courts as many people have been saying since Zundel's convictions last week. It gave free publicity and caused needless pain to the victims of Hitler's madness. It is insulting to the intelligence of Canadian public that they cannot decide what is rubbish and what is history. I am not alone in saying that the Holocaust is not the sole legacy of the Jews of Europe. What about the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the people of Vietnam, Kampuchea and recently those starving Eritreans. All these people are or have been murdered in cold blood because they were the wrong type of people in the eyes of those who ordered or planned their extermination.

It is understandable why several Jewish groups are so upset at the obscenities we witnessed during Zundel's trial. It has caused needless pain to the survivors of the Nazi holocaust. What bothers me is the fact that the self same Jewish groups turned a blind eye on the Nazi-type campaign engineered by the rulers of Israel in the Summer of 1982 when Ariel Sharon sent US supplied planes to bomb Beirut, Sidon Tyre and the refugee colonies in the Southern Lebanon. They came in large numbers to cheer the butcher of Lebanon, Sharon when over half million Israeli Jews demonstrated against this neo-Nazi.

If Zundel's trash on holocaust denial need be condemned what about the writings and speeches of Zionists like Uri Davis: The Haj (which is nothing but a hate literature), Mier Kahane or Rabbi Moshe Levinger, just to name a few. The Jewish Press in New York spews out hate literature in Hebrew and English and is read with great relish. How many Jews have raised their voice against this type of garbage. In fact Uri Davis' book The Haj has been on the best sellers list for months in Canada and USA. Who reads this junk? It is this hypocrisy which gives rise to anti-Jewish feelings and crying wolf at even a genuine criticism of Israeli policies that has turned many people off on the topic of Holocaust. For too long the tragedy of Holocaust has been abused by the Zionist extremists to silence the world over the brutal treatment Israel has meted out to the Arab population in the West Bank, Gaza and lately in the Southern Lebanon.

After recovering from our initial confusion about the somewhat negative nature of your editorial headed "PRO-Male Participation" we discussed our many objections to the viewpoints presented there. This letter does not deal with these objections. This letter is intended to raise a much more important issue. This is the issue of the Editor-in-Chief of the McGill Daily taking up precious office space at Radio McGill during the production of the Women's Issue. This sort of thing has to stop. The presence of Albert Nerenberg prevents our defining ourselves vis à vis Radio staff. He makes us feel we must spell things correctly. It's vexing. Please keep this in mind in future.

To the Daily:

I am writing in response to the article "Stop Rape Campaign Week Begins" by Lynn Gauker in the Daily Monday March 4, 1985. Thank you for your promotional coverage of the events for STOP RAPE WEEK March 4-8. However, corrections must be made.

STOP RAPE WEEK is not just about women's self-defense, especially not the style depicted in the cartoon accompanying the article. I did not authorize the graphic and was not consulted. If I had been asked I would have banned it immediately. The cartoon depicts heroic acts motivated purely by an ego needing to dominate with brute strength rather than clear-headed avoidance and awareness. The useless violence of a woman figure brutally beating and killing 10 men figures for no apparent reason was a visual message that did no compliment nor enhance the article. In fact, it gave a completely absurd and false message about Wen-Do and Feminist philosophy.

More care should be taken in the future with visual as well as printed accounts so that warped and inappropriate impressions are not assumed by the reader.

Ingrid Birker

The following letter was deemed sexist by all Daily staff. However, its inclusion was entirely deliberate.

To the Daily:

I've just read the Women's Day issue of the McGill Daily. From it, and all that I've (sic) from feminists for the past dozen years, I get the impression that these women don't want anything to do with us males. We are "the oppressors" and they want freedom from us so they "can discover an identity other than the one which has been imposed on them. Women need the opportunity to present their viewpoints and their work without interference or domination by men."

Well, as one completely average and completely typical man to all you other men, who are of course exactly like me, I say, let those women have their freedom. Who needs men? The only thing they have ever been any good for is a good lay now and then, but even that has seen its day. Why?

Because, now we have the "cavern of passion"! That's right, for under sixty dollars you can have a device that "does everything you would ask of your most experienced lady, featuring a fleshly-soft interior to engulf you, variable speeds and touch control for the magic mouth grip." If you need the touch of warm flesh, just pop it into the microwave. If you're used to frigid partners, leave it in the refrigerator for a few minutes.

Granted, "the cavern" won't tell you how much it likes getting banged, but then again, it'll never start bitching about male oppression and equal rights. Granted, the cavern doesn't have any feelings, but then again, neither do women. Honestly, I had a girlfriend before I discovered the cavern. I often put her to acts of humiliation and degradation and she never complained... Although I would have knocked her teeth out if she had.

So men, let those women have their freedom. Let them go to their feminist paradise. When they reach menopause, they'll come back, begging for some action. But we'll show them. We'll hold up our caverns of passion and tell them, "This never has a headache, never gets pregnant, never goes through 'the change'. It's never on the rag... So what if we have to clean it out every two weeks?"

Think about guys (sic). You need that thing.

HYDE PARK

To the Daily,

In response to the Feb. 13 story 'Hunger Project Feeds Itself' and to the subsequent letter of protest to it, written on March 4th by Hunger Project advocate Sun Kyung Kim, I would like to make the following comments.

During the beginning of last semester I was approached by Ms. Kim and one of her Hunger Project associates and asked if I would, then and there, attend a three hour briefing on ending hunger. After a moment's hesitation, Ms. Kim urged me to take a stand and see what I could do as my contribution to end hunger. I went to the briefing.

At the door Ms. Kim greeted all who entered by pinning a name tag on them. Of the approximately twelve who showed up, all were also handed a 3 X 5 inch card to sign, pledging their commitment to end world hunger.

Heather, one of Ms. Kim's associates, was quick to point out that by signing the card we would each be doing our part in helping to end hunger on the planet by the year 2000. In no way were we committing ourselves in any financial or time-consuming way, assured Heather; we were just assuring ourselves that we wished hunger to end. In fact, exclaimed Heather, we would be helping to end hunger by our mere awareness of having signed the card.

In a later encounter, Heather asked for a real commitment: "We'd like to get you to come out with us next Saturday for three hours on the street getting others to sign this card. All I want you to do is to commit yourself. Just say you'll do it. Committing yourself doesn't mean you have to keep your commitment, it just means you're probably going to keep it. It's just like when you write a test, you promise yourself you're going to do well even if you don't."

At Hunger Project meetings you are quickly made aware of what, in the Project's eyes, is the most fulfilling and worthy route for you to take. One of the highest 'goals' you can achieve is to become a briefing leader so you, too, can 'officially' give Hunger Project briefings to other concerned people. Of course, there's a course that must be taken before you're fully qualified to give briefings, something that costs a hundred dollars or so.

It's particularly interesting to note that as well as having taken a 'briefing course', there's something else that "look at what's possible in life" by asking such questions as "what kind of a being is a human being?" and explores such mind-boggling concepts as "thoughts have us, we don't have thoughts."

Those who question whether est is part of the Hunger Project or not should also seriously question why Ms. Kim, Hunger Project enthusiast, has taken both est and the 'forum'.

Hunger Project briefings last for three or four hours. During the first half hour you will be thanked ever-so-much for the worthiness of your efforts and told of how you will be learning so many startling facts about hunger in the next three hours. By this time there's only two and a half hours left.

Before the first half hour is up, the briefing leader will also ask at least fifteen times whether or not she's going too fast — something you wish were possible. For the next two hours the briefing leader will then read anywhere from 50 to 100 pages of factual but also highly redundant material related to hunger.

A half hour is left at the end of the session for suggestions on what you can do to stop hunger — more specifically, what you are going to commit yourself to do to help stop hunger.

Ms. Kim, incidentally, in her letter to the Daily, says the Daily "invalidated her commitment" by publishing their Feb. 13 article on The Hunger Project. This vague and haphazard use of the word 'commitment' is later used in Ms. Kim's letter where she states "my participation in ending Hunger is not just a good cause or the right thing to do, it is a serious commitment."

Prior to leaving the briefing, I asked Heather why she hadn't once mentioned any of the political reasons for hunger: "Why do some governments support third-world countries heavily while others are left to fend for themselves?" Heather was speechless.

At a later date, I once again attended a Project meeting, this time a more formal one at the group's Old Montreal office. My probing into this strange group called the Hunger Project has strongly suggested to me that Hunger Project devotee's thinking patterns are shaped. Sometimes the technique is called brainwashing.

It is not simply the fact that Project members are instructed as to what and what not to say. There is clearly something lacking in their personalities. Most briefing leaders have been persuaded to take: est. Although sometimes a very difficult piece of information to extract out of these individuals, enough probing will readily reveal that est is very much a part of the Hunger Project. It's not surprising, since Werner Erhard founded both organizations. The $475 Erhard Seminar Training (later est) program has now been 'retired', according to Charles Hazelton of est's Montreal Area Centre, and replaced by a new and improved version as of Jan. 1 of this year — one which costs "slightly more" at $525. Like est, this new program, the 'Forum', consists of two two-weekend sessions, that according to Hazelton, they are either unable or unwilling to answer basic questions such as "How many less people are starving as a result of the Hunger Project's efforts?" An incredible reply came forth from the group leader, Ms. Shannon McLean when I asked this.

"It's wonderful you are asking questions and are participating in the Hunger Project," said McLean. "It's good you're concerned because that's why we're all here today."

I was then showered with applause from Ms. McLean and a number of other 'supporters' who congratulated me for being such a 'good' person. My question, of course, remained unanswered.

As the Daily reported earlier, all of the Montreal Hunger Project staff have taken est training, though when asked in person they appear very uneasy about the question. In a recent phone conversation, Hunger Project Director Charles Provost was asked the following question: "Do you know anything about EST?" He replied "I read about it." He was then asked, "Did you ever do est?" He replied: "uh...uh...well...what I do with my personal life is my business." Joanne Forget, in charge of donations, recently denied even having heard of est although she has taken est training.

The Hunger Project is a scam. It starts off by getting an emotional response to a world-wide problem. It exploits this emotion and leaves logic by the way-side. After a few hours briefing you are asked to make a cult-like commitment. For those who are vulnerable, the sense of commitment deepens with amount of time — and money — spent on the Hunger Project. Dedicated supporters are encouraged to lose their sense of rational and to live for the Hunger Project, not for the cause of hunger.

I implore anyone who questions any of the above statements to open their eyes and see for themselves. The facts will stare you in the face.
